ROLLIN M. STONE TELLS MARCELLUS HISTORY OF DECADES AGO

Exchange Club Enjoys Talk Of Venerable Citizen
Who Lived Here When Calico Was a Luxury.

Do you remember when Warren Alvord sounded the bugle to tell Marcellus that the stage was about to start over the plank road for Syracuse and points east?

Do you know where the first Marcellus postoffice stood?

Do you remember when the toll gate stood just north of the lower Crown Mills?

Members of Marcellus Exchange Club were treated to a lot of "Do you remembers" last Thursday night at their regular dinner and meeting when Rollin M. Stone, venerable citizen of the village, gave a most interesting talk on the history of Marcellus and surrounding country.

Mr. Stone harked as far back as 80 years. At that time there were just three buildings between the present Stone farm and the four corners, now the postoffice corner. There were the Reed house, surrounded by a hedge and board fence; the Hooper house, next to Pilot's and a building which stood on the site of the present Odd Fellow's Temple.

Of his boyhood, Mr. Stone has a remarkably vivid memory. Eighty-four years have not dimmed the picture in the least. He recalls the Crown Mills, then owned by Chester Moses and his son, Lucius. They lived in the big house now occupied by the Moirs. Next, in the present Dr. Weidman house, lived Bishop Parsons and later, Dr. Bangs. The Case house next door was once a store and stood on the corner but was moved back.

Down by the Creek stood Robert Gray's blacksmith shop. Next was Thomas Walker's house and then the present landmark, the home of Dr. Parsons. Bernie Powell had the store now occupied by Newell Brothers. Where William Thornton now lives was the home of Hezekiah Shepard, B. F. Moses lived where Steve Hunt holds forth and then came the home of Squire Dorchester.

The first postoffice was in the south-east corner of what is now Coyne's barber shop, with postmaster

Harry Kennedy in charge. The postmaster lived next door, where Arthur Campion now resides. Then came the office of Dr. McGonegal in the ... building just east of the hotel, where Mrs. York has a beauty parlor.

Bildad Beach was the jovial host of the hotel. Tradition has it that once, in Revolutionary times, General Lafayette stayed overnight in this Marcellus hostelry. The story goes that the general ordered trout served for breakfast, and a hotel handy-man got up early and caught the trout for the guest's breakfast. There were fish in those days. Carl Warren and Theodore Alvord came up from Borodino later and took over the hotel, naming it The Alvord house, the name it retains today. Warren Alvord drove the stage, the hearse and had a livery. An old bugle hung on the door post, and a few minutes before the stage was scheduled to leave Mr. Alvord would sound a call, sending the clear notes out over the countryside as a warning that the stage was about to start.

Rev. Levi Parsons was the first pastor of the present Presbyterian Church. In those days and down into later days, two lines of sheds were filled with the carriages of church-going farmers every Sunday. Mr. Stone recalled the spiritual fervor of folks of other days and compared it with present-day people.

The village cemetery occupied but a small space years ago and a large part of the present City of the Dead was pasture for the Alvord stock.

The present Horace Stone home stands in what was once Jim Johnson's cornfield. The Johnsons came down from Howlett Hill and built the present Richard May house. A young doctor, Dr. Post, was a figure in village life and became a leader in civic and firemanic matters. Dr. Post was said to have had a disposition that could not brook defeat, and when his neighbor Gallup defeated him in an election he was a broken man. A few years later he suddenly pulled stakes and left for other parts. A later report said he had settled somewhere in the Mohawk Valley.

Dr. Tefft lived in the old brick house next to the Chrysler lumber yard and had 46 acres of fine land surrounding it, or near it.

Isaac Share built the house now occupied by Harry Sachaklian. Next lived Levi Mogg the village schoolmaster, who could wield the rod in “manner sufficient”. Ben Clark next, raised 5 acres of tobacco each year which he cured in the present Jim Murphy barn.

The Henry Lanning house, occupied by Mrs. Pearl Parsons, (the meeting place of the Exchange Club), was owned by a party whose name this writer cannot recall. The village paid the owner a certain sum each year and she housed the wanderer who came to the village at nightfall. Mr. Stone recalled seeing a dozen forlorn looking men seated in the very room in which the Club was at that moment listening to his talk.

Deacon Beach lived in the house now occupied by Kulba and owned a sawmill which stood on the site of the lower Crown Mill. Some weird stories are told of this sawmill and a couple of mysterious murders are said to have been committed there.

A man names Bettsinger built the Welsh home on the corner of Orchard Road, but most of the land was owned by the mill interests. A once well-known figure in Marcellus history, “Uncle” Cosset (Cossit?) owned the entire stretch of land embracing the Reed and Stone Farms, but this was before the days of Rollin Stone.

At the close of his address Mr. Stone suggested that D. D. Coon be asked to give the history of the south and west portions of Marcellus and this will probably be done in the future.

Mr. Stone then answered questions relating to the village life of decades ago and many pleasant and humorous antidotes were cited.

Attorney Arthur W. Wilson, President of The Exchange Club, in introducing Mr. Stone spoke briefly, telling of interesting experiences he had had during his boyhood with business men of the village, many of whom were present. ~

“LAFAYETTE” TRADITION DISCREDITED

Historian Claims General Was Hastening to Syracuse
TALKS TO STUDY CLUB

Famous Soldier Overslept In Auburn And Crowd Waits All Night To See Him.

Discrediting the age old Marcellus tradition that General Lafayette spent a night as a guest of the Alvord House, just after the Revolution, Major H. C. Durston of Manlius told the members of the Study Club on Tuesday night that it would have been physically impossible for the General to have accomplished this. General Lafayette did, however, pass through the village and may have tarried a few minutes or an hour, but as for remaining overnight, this could not have been.

According to Major Durston, the General arrived at Auburn about noon, tired and hungry from a long intense journey from the west. After dinner at Auburn he engaged a bed and slept soundly until around four in the afternoon. Then, suddenly remembering that he had an engagement at Onondaga Hill and Syracuse, he hastily dressed and started on his trip in a carriage furnished by a man named Sherwood, who lived at Auburn or Skaneateles.

Travel Slow

The Roads in those days were not good and the party tossed around in the carriage, arriving at Onondaga Hill about five the next morning. According to Maj. Durston, he probably stopped at Marcellus to greet the crowd that had gathered to see him, and may have taken refreshment at the Alvord House, but there is no authentic record that he remained here overnight.

Arriving at Onondaga Hill the general was greeted by a large crowd that had waited all night to see him. From there he kept on to Syracuse, where he was supposed to have been the guest of honor at a banquet the night before. History has it that he breakfasted in Syracuse.

For many years the tradition has been handed down in Marcellus that General Lafayette was overnight guest at the old hostelry on Main Street but this latest bit of information changes it. Major Durston is well versed in Onondaga history and his talk Tuesday night was quite enlightening to those privileged to attend. He told of the location of the different tribes and several anecdotes concerning their activities. Major Durston said that while the surrounding country was the home of the redskin, the site of the present town of Marcellus was definitely not Indian country. The dusky savage hunted in this region and Indian settlements were located as near as Camillus, but none were known to have existed in what is now Marcellus. ~

CROWN MILLS MAKING KHAKI

Marcellus' Biggest Industry, The Moir Woolen Mills, Running Special Cloth for British Army.

Mr. Edward Moir of Crown Mills, Marcellus, states that Crown Mills has an order for khaki cloth for the British Government, which will keep the mills busy for some time. Further orders for the British army, or other countries at war are being sought and if obtained still more cloth will be produced.

Further we learn that some seven million yards of this cloth was ordered of United States mills, of which a small part is secured here, comparatively a very small part. Mills at Waterloo didn't get any and are closed, so that weavers from Waterloo are coming here and Crown Mills is able to hire all the help they need at present.

The upper mill is running from one-third to one-half of its forty odd looms on this cloth and six or eight, looms on a double shift, i.e. all night. The same portion of looms are on this cloth in the lower mill of the twenty odd total, but not running nights there. So these mills could readily turn out three times its present output if crowded to do so. They are also occupied now on usual work and preparation of samples for fall trade.

This khaki cloth being produced is heavy, a mixture of brown, darker than the brown khaki of the U.S. Army now in use. Crown Mills submitted samples made from a piece of the desired cloth, and their product accepted. They have also made samples of greys, greens, etc., now before authorities, in their seeking after similar orders from the governments of the other warring nations. The French and Belgium cloths are shades of green.

Payment for the product is assured by bankers of New York city, their standing well known, and fully satisfactory to Mr. Moir, who has personally accomplished the entire deal, and is entitled to much praise for effecting this boom to his mills, and of course to Marcellus.

Notes: The Upper Mill closed in 1955 and the Lower Mill (on North Street) closed in 1961.

The restored Moir residence on Orange Street is now for sale and was pictured in the January 18, 2015 Post Standard. ~

Marcellus Observer January 22, 1915

The House of Representatives voted 174 for and 204 against, Tuesday, the Mondell resolution for the submission to the State Legislatures of a Constitutional amendment providing that the right of suffrage shall not be abridged because of sex. The measure lacked 78 of passage, as a two-thirds vote of the House is necessary for its adoption. Only 378 votes were cast out of a total membership of 435, showing many absentees. The measure did not command as many votes as did the Prohibition question before the House a few weeks ago. The suffragists are not cast down, and will put their issue to the front in the next Presidential contest. Congressman Clancy of this district voted with the suffragists, though of the New York delegation of 43 in the House only 29 voted on the measure – nine for the resolution and 20 against it.

Note: The 19th Amendment to the US Constitution granting women's suffrage was finally approved by congress in 1919 and ratified by the states in 1920. ~

TO MAKE BRIDGES SAFE.
Resolution Introduced In Assembly
To Investigate Conditions.

A resolution has been introduced in the State Legislature by Assemblyman Pratt of Washington county which calls for a committee of eight Assemblymen and Senators to investigate the conditions of highway bridges in the State, with a view to having all unsafe ones rebuilt.

Assemblyman Pratt declares that many of the structures have been built a long time and are not sufficiently strong to withstand the strain of the present day traffic owing to the enormous weight of automobiles and motor trucks. ~
